

Dillard University men make news with their wardrobe choices.

“When young men come to college, they have no idea what the image of a college man is, so I wanted their first image to be a man of honor,” says Jerome Bailey, Dillard’s SGA president, and the author of the idea. He adds that if students “are dressed professionally from the first day on, it will not be a fad or a phase, it will be the first and lasting impression.”

See photos in Diverse - Issues in Higher Education...

Read more on the HBCUBUZZ website...

---