

It is a pleasure to welcome you to the Dillard University School of Nursing. It is a program steeped in history and honor, as it was the first program in Louisiana to offer the baccalaureate in nursing. For more than 65 years, Dillard's nursing program has created an environment of educational excellence both here and abroad.

The commitment of our faculty and staff produces graduates who distinguish themselves by generating the knowledge to advance the profession, participating in the education of future nurses, working with interdisciplinary teams, and delivering care to patients in many different settings and geographic locations. Being a nurse is rewarding. Today, the growing need for caring and competent nurses makes it even more personally satisfying. It is a career that can take many paths, depending on your interests and goals. As it has for many others, the journey can start here and we invite you to join us.

Professional Schools and Sciences Building

The School of Nursing is located in the Professional Schools and Sciences Building, which opened in the fall of Wahneema Lubiano, PhD, is a professor of nursing and the director of the Center for Nursing Research and Practice at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She is also a member of the National Academy of Medicine and the National Academy of Sciences. She has published numerous articles and books on nursing research and practice. She is currently working on a book about the future of nursing.